

Project Formulation Workshop

Sustainable Management and Genetic Conservation of Teak Resources

between 26-27 May 2014
Bangkok, Premises of RSPG

Organizers

Plant Genetic Conservation Project under the Royal Initiative of
Her Royal Highness Princess Maha Chakri Sirindhorn (RSPG)

International Union of Forest Research Organizations

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations

TEAKNET (International Teak R & D Network)

Background

Teak takes a minor position in the total volume of world timber production and trade. Yet it competes in the high-value hardwood markets and is a major strategic element in the forestry economies of many tropical countries. Natural teak forests are estimated to cover ca. 29 million ha in India, Lao PDR, Myanmar and Thailand, of which almost half is in Myanmar. The available old-growth, high-quality teak resources are under threat due to over-exploitation and conversion to other land-uses. In Myanmar the production from native teak forests exceeds the annual allowable cut for many years and the share of high quality teak in timber auctions is on the decline.

The area of planted teak forests is estimated to be ca. 4.5 million ha, of which 83% is in Asia, 11% in Africa, and 6% in tropical America. Globally, planted teak is the only valuable hardwood that constitutes a globally emerging forest resource and has attracted large investments from the private sector. However most planted teak forests use germplasm that is based on a limited number of clones and hybrids and it is imperative to plan, organize and implement a program for the genetic conservation of teak resources on a global level in order to conserve the existing native teak resources and to widen the genetic resource base of planted teak forests in view of new challenges from climate change and extreme weather events.

Workshop objectives

The major objectives of the workshop are (a) to support the formation of a professional network of teak researchers from Asian countries, (b) to deliver the data and information needed to formulate a project proposal and (c) to develop a draft project proposal suitable for submission to international donor agencies for funding.

Sponsors

- The Plant Genetic Conservation Project under the Royal Initiative of Her Royal Highness Princess Maha Chakri Sirindhorn (RSPG)
- Special Programme for Development of Capacities (SPDC) of IUFRO based on funding from the Korea Forest Research Institute, Republic of Korea

Accommodation

Royal Princess Larn Luang Hotel, 269 Larn Luang, Pomprab, Samphanthawong, Bangkok
